To conceptualize images of blood as assemblages that perform and express affective intensities, connecting with social and discursive formations, the thesis combines the actor-network approach of Bruno Latour with the philosophy of Deleuze and Guattari. These blood assemblages are themselves transformative and transient material constellations, performed through multitudes of relational ...

Out of Drew's work, he was appointed director of the first American Red Cross Blood Bank in February 1941. The blood bank being in charge of blood for use by the U.S. Army and Navy, he disagreed with the exclusion of the blood of African-Americans from plasma-supply networks. In 1942, Drew resigned from his posts after the armed forces ruled that the blood of African-Americans would be ...
